

Hi, I am happy to see that this issue is being finally 'looked at' and some legislation has been written. Most pets are considered 'family' and I think that they should be treated as if they were an extension of the family. There should be more control on animals, pets, etc. that fly in the cargo area of a plane. I have heard too many nightmarish stories about pets that have froze to death, conditions being too hot, injuries and/or death of pets due to mishandling while flying. One would not put a human child in a crate and in the cargo hold like an animal. Some rules and regulations have to be made so people are able to travel with their pets via airplane. Thank you and have a good day
