My comments are simple. I am against your proposed CAPS rules that mandate that airlines profile passengers to be singled out for special inspections.

You claim that it will be random thereby ensuring that no discrimination will take place. I'm sure that is the intension, but I do not believe that the results will bear it out to be true.

I am sick and tired of the government intruding into the privacy of citizens by making use of private business.

The minimal risks that the threat of terrorism presents have been with us for many years. Yet suddenly, our government is scrambling to enact new laws and regulations to meet this old threat by means of intrusion of personal privacy. This needs to end.

When you are willing to give up your freedoms for a little percieved safety, you've lost everything our forefathers ever fought for.
