I fully support the profiling plan that may go into effect to attempt to identify terrorists using the airlines, I believe we must be as proactive as possible to fight terrorism. As air travel is not a mandatory method of travel, but a convenient one, I am not concerned about my rights being violated as an airline passenger if it can reduce the impact of terrorists in the US.

In my opinion, if an airline customer is unhappy with the thorough searches he must be put through, he should not be flying. In addition, if a customer feels any security meaasures are a violation of his privacy, I again feel he had the choice to avoid air travel and should do so instead of insisting security measures be reduced so as not to infringe on his privacy.
