Comments:

Regarding the whistle controversey, as a driver and a train enthusiast I think trains should NOT be required to whistle at protected crossings where there are gates or other crossing devices. The whistle (horn) noise is disturbing to residents of the area and does not stop irresponsible drivers from trying to beat the train across the crossing. The engineer, who must witness this collision, is who I worry about because there's trauma for them having to experience the incident. There's more to this, of course, but basically the rule should be eliminated. Jack Buckley
