

I believe data recording devices in automobiles is necessary. Some would feel as though it is a invasion of privacy. I think those who have lost loved ones through the careless acts of others would suport this. I for one didn't ask to have a temprature gauge in my car, nor those who have heated seats. If the government is truly intested in public safety they would require this as they do in trucks, trains and aircraft. Many more lives are damaged and destroyed through sharp attorneys and other 'sharp shooting' of the system so that the line between who is responsible is fuzzy. If light/speed recorders at least were in vehicles, perhaps the incidents would not occur. If they did occur, the guilty parties would be less likely to avoid responsibility to society and the victims.
