

My name is Mark Johnson. I am a student at the Harvard Business School and I have recently become aware of the dire need for automatic external defibrillators (AEDs) on US aircraft because a tragic death which took the life a classmate to be of mine who is also a close friend of a close friend. I am also the son and the grandson of two Air Traffic Control Specialists so I feel a special attachment to the FAA and air safety which makes particularly concerned about avoiding unnecessary tragedies like these. THESE DEATHS CAN BE AVOIDED if the administration demands that AEDs be mandatory on all flights. There is little economic burden that I can see created by such a ruling and an obvious benefit to society. So I beg you to consider and dictate that AEDs be mandatory on all US flights.
