

I realize that most accidents involving large trucks are mainly caused by automobiles, however, I firmly believe (as does my 18 wheeler driver next door) that an experienced trucker, e.g. over 30 yrs old has learned to control his rig whereby he more than likely can avert a serious accident. Please do not train persons under the age of 21 to become truck drivers (of any size). I have noticed in my many hours of travel that any rig that tailgates me usually is driven by a younger driver. The older ones take their driving seriously and courteously.

Thanks for hearing me out. This is an important issue that would effect many lives.
