In-flight emergency medicine in line for upgrade

By ADRIAN DOBSON
Health Correspondent

A FURTHER round of proposals for upgrading Britain's in-flight medical services is being considered by the Department of Health. The proposals, which are being considered by the Health Committee of the House of Commons, include the introduction of a new system of in-flight medical training and the provision of a new type of medical equipment for use on board aircraft.

The proposals are being considered by the Health Committee of the House of Commons, which is currently conducting an inquiry into the state of in-flight medical services. The committee is expected to report on its findings in the next few weeks.
