

We support neither proposal regarding tire pressure warning systems. This is a system which will increase the cost of a new vehicle significantly while offering very little benefit. When the vehicle hits the used car market and is bought by poor people this is a system which will be just another blinking light on the dash because we can't afford a repair.

Caution: How many people will be killed because they rely on this tire pressure monitoring system and do not inspect their tires for defects and wear?

What will be the impact upon the manufacturer of this and the automobile maker when the trial lawyers get a good case?

This is not wanted, drop the idea. Thanks.
