

Any tire pressure monitoring equipment should not be required of vehicle manufacturers. Equipment available as an option would be wholly appropriate, but the expense should not be imposed on those who do not want or need more gadgets to have to purchase or to have malfunction. Those people who want it should have it available, but those who prefer not should be able to buy a vehicle without the new devices.