

This idea is insane. If a person is not savvy enough to check the air in their tires they have no business driving a 3000 pound vehicle at 65 miles per hour. BTW: Does this make the automobile manufacturer liable for accidents due to underinflated tires if the sensor fails to work?

This is as insane as headlights that are on all the time. I have come close to having accidents because of being blinded by peoples headlights in the daytime.

Absolutely insane.

I bet the same people proposing this bill are the folks who make my 5-point Simpson harness illegal to drive on the road because it is not DOT approved. However it is certified for 300mph crashes by BHRA and IHRA. This is another example of people who should be voted out of office.

How come I can buy a motorcycle that will do the 1/4 mile in less than 11 seconds and I am not required to wear a helmet on the street? If you want to legislate something useful then work on real areas of concern.
