

I am responding to your requests for public comment regarding glare from certain types of vehicle headlights. I am not aware that I am light sensitive, however, the new "blue lights" are so intense that I am forced to look away. They are painfully bright to the extent that I get temporary headaches from the glare. Luckily, few cars in my area have these types of lights, I don't know if I would even be able to drive at night if these were more popular. I support energy efficient lighting, but I hope the technology can be modified to decrease the intensity of the light. Thanks.
