

I too have noticed an increase in the last few years of headlights that cause a glare problem. In my experience, the problem has not been with high mounted lights on trucks/SUVs, but rather, the new HID lamps, which are significantly brighter than conventional headlamps. The first time I saw one of these on the road, I looked into it and was astounded to find it was factory equipment and government approved. While certainly providing better visibility for the driver of the vehicle equipped with them, they are simply too bright for oncoming traffic and should never have been allowed on the road.
