

The glare problem with new types of headlights is very real and potentially dangerous. There should be objective guidelines applied to these types of lights so that other drivers are not blinded by them.