

I've noticed some makes and models of cars and trucks have headlights that are brighter than average. I frequently flash my hi-beams at oncoming cars only to be blinded by even brighter hi-beams when they flash back.

There also seems to be a trend to use auxiliary lights all the time. Are these, or should these be regulated for use only in certain or extraordinary driving conditions, and not for everyday driving around town.