

I am writing to urge that transients once more be freely allowed to visit College Park airport, the world's oldest continually-operated airfield. It is a part of our aviation heritage -- its museum contains many important exhibits -- it provides many other interesting services -- the 94th Aero Squadron is a popular pilot's (and aviation enthusiasts') establishment. There is no reason to single out this airport (or the other two in the TFR), when there are so many other airports in the vicinity of DC. Don't over-react -- general aviation is not a threat.
