

This is a horrible example of rule-making. There is no delineation of how the TSA will justify labeling anyone as a 'security threat', nor are there safeguards in effect to prevent abuse of this system. This violates the due-process clause of the Constitution, and constitutes the presumption of guilt, with the burden of proof on the accused. This is abominable and cannot be allowed to go forth.