

It does not appear that repair stations have any transitional period. Is it effective at release? That seems like a burden. I am aware of the accident but not the incidents in question. It appears to me that the things cited in the NPRM pertain to loading baggage. Why impose further regulations on the repair station for improper baggage loading?