

Please do not allow helicopter overflight rules over the National Parks to be weakend. It is extreamly disturbing to be hiking in and around Haleakala Crater and have helicopters bring their loud drumming noise into the natural reality there. This is a sacred place not a place to be disturbed by gigantic noise machines. How would you like to have this disturbance in your livingroom? Of course you wouldn't but the tour companies think they can go anywhere without following basic rules of decency. There is more to tourism than helicopter tours. There is a right for the public to trust that they will have basic privacy rights including the right to travel into sacred places away from the noise of commercial helicopter tours. Please respect our Aina and our rights to peace and tranquility. Lance Holter
