

It's in my opinion that the program that TSA currently has can be modified to a better security program. Without a good security program, terrorists will be able to infiltrate with ease. If terrorists can't get in, they will not be able to sabotage anything. An added option would be implementing a door in the cargo area.

The installation of surveillance cameras will be more cost effective than the installation of a door. Also the amount of the personnel in the cargo area can be minimized to mission essential personnel only. Adding a security guard in the cargo area will reduce the amount of security related incidents. Another topic discussed would be armed pilots who could train at least twice a year in order to stay up-dated with what's going on around the world.
