

I think that the installation of doors will be the best route. Airlines already spend money on security. So why not just correct all the doors and save some money in the long run. That way airlines don't have to stop flying which could possibly result in the loss revenue from out-of-service time (2 days to 4 days). Overall money will be spent no matter which route is taken. So it's important to get it out of the way now.