I feel that increasing the regulations/restrictions on use of simulators for flight training/refreshers training will be detrimental to the safety of aviation. I have many hours of simulator training and personally know that many situations can be trained for in simulation which can not be done in actual flight. I believe that increased regulation will only decrease the use of simulation training, thereby decreasing aviation safety through increased costs to pilots and the elimination of this training by some of the operators presently offering simulation training due to increased costs.
