

Dear Sirs,

I applaud your proposal to permit oxygen concentrators on board of air planes. However, your proposal does not go far enough.

My story is a good example: My 92 year old mother lives in Germany.

I have not been able to visit her in two years because emphysema prevents me from flying.

The little portable concentrator you are proposing to permit only has a 50 minute battery life. I would be physically unable to carry enough Batteries for the 9 hour flight to Germany. So unless power outlets are Provided this solution would not help very many of us, as it would only permit short distance flights.

Respectfully

H. Hanson
