

I do not believe this exemption should be approved. Placing the rear brake control on the left handle bar would be confusing to the rider at best due to the fact that historically the clutch release has been in that location. At worst this could be a serious safety issue.