

I think it's a bad idea to remove the chemical placards from train rail cars. How will emergency crews be able to respond accordingly? No matter how you try to change the markings it will have to be somewhat common knowledge for anyone working with, near or responding to an emergency to be able to know how to handle the chemical. How is that going to keep unsavory persons from knowing too?