

I strongly urge there be no change in the signage that identifies haz mat transported by any means. Without signage, first responders and the public at large are at extreme risk. There would be no way to tell if a tanker contained toxic material or something as innocuous as milk. The odds of terrorists stealing a container of haz mat are much lower than the odds of an accident requiring immediate, appropriate remediation.