

Please, government, stop trying to save us from ourselves. Tire air pressure--like keeping gasoline in the car--is a driver fundamental responsibility. If it would cost $70 per car, let the people incapable of keeping their tires properly inflated use the money toward a brain transplant. Like the check engine light, most people would ignore it anyway. My mother-in-law has the "low pressure" feature on her car and it sends an alert periodically--low pressure or not. And in 2005, please don't propose "winshield wiper rubber worn" warning light. Just stay out!
